Tristan Biehn is working toward her Honours in Anthropology at Concordia University in Montreal. She hails from St. John's, Newfoundland, yet has spent almost half of her life in the US, primarily in Pennsylvania. Her current research focuses on the infrastructure(s) and interactions of native land claims, the Canadian government, and mining interests. She has also studied erotic agency among the performers of Montreal's burlesque community.

Keir Forgie holds a BSc Hons Neuroscience degree from Dalhousie University in Halifax, and is enrolled in a BA Hons Anthropology at Concordia University in Montreal. He is originally from Regina, Saskatchewan. His primary research and study interests have been in the areas of neural plasticity, synaptogenesis, neuropathic pain following spinal cord injury, global health, and the global obesity epidemic. In September, he will begin his first semester of medical school at Dalhousie University, class of 2018.

Maximilian C. Forte is the director of the New Imperialism seminar from which this volume emerged. He is a professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Concordia University in Montreal. His research focuses on "humanitarian" imperialism, the corporatization and militarization of academia, neoliberalism and plural understandings of democracy. He also teaches courses in Political Anthropology, Indigenous Resurgence, Globalization, and on imperialism in the history of Anthropology.

Mathieu Guerin is completing a BA Honours in Anthropology at Concordia University in Montreal. While originally from Québec City, Mathieu grew up and spent most of his life in Calgary, Alberta. His primary research and study interests have been in the areas of science and technology studies, posthumanism, and Political Anthropology.

Hilary King is graduating from Concordia University with a BA Major in Sociology and a Minor in Women's Studies. She is originally from Vancouver, BC. Her primary research and study interests have been in the areas of homonormativity, whiteness, and Canadian settler colonialism.

John Manicom is specializing in Anthropology with a minor in Mandarin Chinese at Concordia University in Montréal. He is originally from Gatineau, Québec. His primary research and study interests have been in the areas of youth homelessness, gender and sexuality, and the dynamics of power.

Karine Perron is graduating with a BA Specialization in Anthropology and Minor in Sociology at Concordia University in Montreal. She is originally from Drummondville, Quebec. Her primary research and study interests have been in the areas of political and economic anthropology, media studies, and social movements.

Laura Powell is completing her BA in Anthropology at Concordia University in Montreal, with a minor in Canadian Irish Studies. She is originally from Sainte-Agathe-de-Lotbinière, Quebec. Her study interests have been in the areas of Irish studies, and armed conflicts.

Émile St-Pierre is completing a BA Honours in Anthropology at Concordia University in Montreal. He has an interest in medical anthropology, and more specifically in the use and circulation of pharmaceuticals as well as biomedical knowledge and technologies.
